

Vital Research on Public Health Now Available to Everyone

Press Release – Pacific Institute for Research and Evaluation

September 7, 2006

WASHINGTON – For more than 30 years, PIRE has produced essential knowledge about the problems and prevention of some of society’s most serious public health threats, including underage drinking, drug abuse, impaired driving, teen risk behaviors, unintentional injuries and neighborhood violence.

Now, PIRE’s knowledge can be everyone’s knowledge. Its newly redeveloped website, www.PIRE.org, features the PIRE Resource Finder, www.PIRE.org/finder, a repository of original PIRE research and program materials, while the PIRE Spotlight and Newsroom help interpret the important work of PIRE researchers. The website also presents PIRE research guides and other PIRE-related websites on public health problems and solutions.

Unlike websites that gather up health news from outside sources, www.PIRE.org offers only original content from PIRE research and program staff, which assures the highest level of quality. To stay informed about the latest research on public health problems and solutions, go to www.PIRE.org/subscribe to receive monthly updates on the vital work produced by the scientists and program directors at PIRE.

PIRE – Pacific Institute for Research and Evaluation – is one of the nation’s preeminent independent nonprofit public health organizations. It has research and program centers in eight cities and is funded mainly by federal and state science grants and contracts.
